Who built the seven gates of Thebes?
The books are filled with names of kings.
Was it kings who hauled the craggy blocks of stone?
And Babylon, so many times destroyed,
Who built the city up each time? In which of Lima’s houses,
That city glittering with gold, lived those who built it?
In the evening when the Chinese wall was finished Where did the masons go? Imperial Rome Is full of arcs of triumph. Who reared them up? Over whom Did the Caesars triumph? Byzantium lives in song,
Were all her dwellings palaces? And even in Atlantis of the legend
The night the sea rushed in,
The drowning men still bellowed for their slaves.

Young Alexander conquered India.
He alone?
Caesar beat the Gauls.
Was there not even a cook in his army?
Philip of Spain wept as his fleet
Was sunk and destroyed. Were there no other tears?
Frederick the Great triumphed in the Seven Years War. Who Triumphed with him?

Each page a victory,
At whose expense the victory ball?
Every ten years a great man,
Who paid the piper?

So many particulars.
So many questions.

Questions to ponder:
1. What is the importance of the title? (Hint: consider the literary elements)
2. List all of the roles (or jobs) that are mentioned in the poem.

3. Do all of those roles appear in social studies books? Which ones?

4. What is the purpose of having so many interrogative sentences? Are they purely rhetorical?

5. Explain the meaning of line 24. Is it to be taken literally?

6. Line 25 is an allusion to a famous fable. Explain it.

7. Where do women of the working classes appear in the poem? Why doesn’t the author mention their work? Why is this ironic?

8. To what extent and how are the working classes represented in the social studies you learn in school?

9. What is the tone of this poem? (BTW, it does connect with the theme.)

For a Lady I Know

Countee Cullen (1903 – 1946)

She even thinks that up in heaven
Her class lies late and snores,
While poor black cherubs rise at seven
To celestial chores.

Questions for your consideration

1. In just 23 words, the poet reveals his bias and point of view. What are they? Why might he have such a bias? (use Google)

2. What does the word “class” mean in line 2?

3. Put a description together of the “she” in line 1.

4. What image is created by the use of the word “cherub”?

5. What tone does the poet create? How does he do this?

The golf links lie so near the mill (1917)
Sarah Cleghorn (1876 – 1959)

The golf links lie so near the mill
That almost every day
The laboring children can look out
And see the men at play.

Directions for your thoughts

1. What does the word “mill” mean in line 1?

2. Even though the word “class” is not in this poem, it is implied. Explain how it works here.

3. Look up the word “juxtaposition.” Define it here and then explain how it functions in this poem.

4. Where is the irony in this poem and how does it connect to the theme?

5. Note the rhyme and rhythm of the lines. There is an alternating of iambic tetrameter and iambic trimester. This creates a “sing song” nursery rhyme quality. How does this affect the poem’s message?

Ballad of the Landlord  (1951)

Langston Hughes  (1902 – 1967)

Landlord, landlord,
My roof has sprung a leak.
Don’t you ‘member I told you about it Way last week?

Landlord, landlord,
These steps is broken down.
When you come up yourself
It’s a wonder you don’t fall down.

Ten Bucks you say I owe you?
Ten Bucks you say is due?
10
Well, that’s Ten Bucks more’n I’ll pay you Till you fix this house up new.

What? You gonna get eviction orders?
You gonna cut off my heat?
You gonna take my furniture and 15

Throw it in the street?

Um-huh! You talking high and mighty.
Talk on – till you get through.
You ain’t gonna be able to say a word
If I land my fist on you.

20

Police! Police!
Come and get this man!
He’s trying to ruin the government
And overturn the land!

Copper’s whistle!
25
Patrol bell!
Arrest.

Precinct Station.
Iron cell.

Questions to help us understand

1. What is the purpose of the questions in this poem? Are they rhetorical only?
2. A setting is implied here. Describe it.
3. Who is arrested? From your point of view, is this justice? Explain.
4. What is missing in your understanding of this incident if you only saw the newspaper headlines?
5. What is the effect of the short lines 25-30?
6. Why does the title draw attention to the landlord? Why isn’t the title <Ballad of the Tenant>?

Tired (1922)

Fenton Johnson (1888 – 1958)

I am tired of work; I am tired of building up somebody else’s civilization.
Let us take a rest, M’Lissy Jane.
I will go down to the Last Chance Saloon, drink a gallon or two of gin, shoot a game or two of dice and sleep the rest of the night on one of Mike’s barrels.
You will let the old shanty go to rot, the white people’s clothes turn to dust, and the Calvary Baptist Church sink to the bottomless pit.
You will spend your days forgetting you married me and your nights hunting the warm gin Mike serves the ladies in the rear of the Last Chance Saloon.
Throw the children into the river; civilization has given us too many. It is better to die than it is to grow up and find out that you are colored.
Pluck the stars out of the heavens. The stars mark our destiny. The stars marked my destiny.
I am tired of civilization.

Ponder these Questions

1. Who is the narrator of this poem? What clues are there in the poem to help you answer?
2. What effect is created by the imagery in lines 4--9?
3. Identify the mood of this poem and then identify the tone.
4. Define irony.
5. What effect is created by the use and repetition of the word “civilization”?
Out of the mud two strangers came
And caught me splitting wood in the yard.
And one of them put me off my aim
By hailing cheerily “Hit them hard!”
I knew pretty well why he dropped behind
And let the other go on a way.
I knew pretty well what he had in mind:
He wanted to take my job for pay.

Good blocks of oak it was I split,
As large around as the chopping block;
And every piece I squarely hit
Fell splinterless as a cloven rock.
The blows that a life of self-control
Spares to strike for the common good,
That day, giving a loose to my soul,
I spent on the unimportant wood.

The sun was warm but the wind was chill.
You know how it is with an April day
When the sun is out and the wind is still,
You’re one month on in the middle of May.

But if you so much as dare to speak,
A cloud comes over the sunlit arch,
A wind comes off a frozen peak,
And you’re two months back in the middle of March.

A bluebird comes tenderly up to alight
And turns to the wind to unruffle a plume,
His song so pitched as not to excite
A single flower as yet to bloom.
It is snowing a flake: and he half knew Winter was only playing possum.

Except in color he isn’t blue,
But he wouldn’t advise a thing to blossom.

The water for which we may have to look
In summertime with a witching wand,
In every wheelrut’s now a brook,
In every print of a hoof a pond.
Be glad of water, but don’t forget
The lurking frost in the earth beneath
That will steal forth after the sun is set
And show on the water its crystal teeth.

The time when most I loved my task
These two must make me love it more
By coming with what they came to ask.
You’d think I never had felt before
The weight of an ax-head poised aloft,

The grip on earth of outspread feet,
The life of muscles rocking soft
And smooth and moist in vernal heat.

Out of the woods two hulking tramps
(from sleeping God knows where last night,

But not long since in the lumber camps.)
They thought all chopping was theirs of right.
Men of the woods and lumberjacks,
They judged me by their appropriate tool.
Except as a fellow handled an ax

They had no way of knowing a fool.

Nothing on either side was said.
They knew they had but to stay their stay
And all their logic would fill my head:
As that I had no right to play

With what was another man’s work for gain.
My right might be love but theirs was need.
And where the two exist in twain
Theirs was the better right--agreed.

But yield who will to their separation,

My object in living is to unite
My avocation and my vocation
As my two eyes make one in sight.
Only where love and need are one,
And the work is play for mortal stakes,

Is the deed ever really done
For Heaven and the future’s sakes.

Things to think about
1. What is the narrator doing, and is he enjoying it?
2. What is meant by a “life of self-control” (line 13)? Do you have a life of self-control?
3. Lines 14 and 16 form an antithesis. Explain how this works.
4. What did the two tramps want?
5. What figurative language can be seen in lines 38—40? What effect is created?
6. State a theme about work that can be supported by events in this poem.
The Triangle Fire\(^1\) (1983)

Mary Fell  (b. 1947)

1. Havdallah\(^2\)

This is the great divide by which God split the world: on the Sabbath side he granted rest, eternal toiling on the workday side.

But even one revolution of the world is an empty promise where bosses where bills to pay respect no heavenly bargains. Until each day is ours let us pour darkness in a dish and set it on fire, bless those who labor as we pray, praise God his holy name, strike for the rest.

1:On March 25, 1911, a fire started at the Triangle Shirtwaist, on the ninth floor of the Asch Building. Hundreds of women workers, mostly Italian and Russian Jewish immigrants, had been locked in to keep out union organizers and therefore could not escape. Nearly one hundred fifty women, some as young as fourteen, died in the fire.

2:Ceremony marking the end of the Jewish Sabbath.
2. Among the Dead
First a lace of smoke decorated the air of the workroom, the far wall unfolded into fire. The elevator shaft spun out flames like a bobbin, the last car sank.
I leaped for the cable, my only chance. Woven steel burned my hands as I wound to the bottom.

I opened my eyes. I was lying in the street. Water and blood washed the cobbles, the sky rained ash. A pair of shoes lay beside me, in them
two blistered feet.
I saw the weave in the fabric of a girl’s good coat,
the wilted nosegay pinned to her collar.
Not flowers, what I breathed then,
awake among the dead.

3. Asch Building
In a window, lovers embrace
haloed by light.
He kisses her, holds her gently, lets her go nine stories to the street.
Even the small ones
put on weight
as they fall:
eleven thousand pounds split
the fireman’s net, implode the deadlights

on the Greene Street side, until the basement catches them and holds. Here two faceless ones are found folded neatly over the steam pipes like dropped rags.

I like the one on that smoky ledge, taking stock in the sky’s deliberate mirror.
She gives her hat
to wind, noting its style, spills her week’s pay.

from its envelope, a joke on those who pretend heaven provides, and chooses where there is no choice to marry air, to make a disposition of her life.

4. Personal Effects
One lady’s handbag, containing rosary beads, elevated railroad ticket, small pin with picture, pocket knife, one small purse containing $1.68 in cash, handkerchiefs,
a small mirror, a pair of gloves, two thimbles, a Spanish comb, one yellow metal ring, five keys, one fancy glove button, one lady’s handbag containing one gent’s watch case number of movement 6418593 and a $1 bill, one half dozen postal cards, a buttonhook, a man’s photo, a man’s garter, a razor strap, one portion of limb and hair of human being.

5. Industrialist’s Dream
This one’s dependable won’t fall apart under pressure doesn’t lie down on the job doesn’t leave early come late won’t join unions strike ask for a raise unlike one hundred forty six others I could name who couldn’t take the heat this one’s still at her machine and doubtless of spotless moral character you can tell by the bones pure white this one does what she’s told and you don’t hear her complaining.

6. The Witness

Woman, I might have watched you sashay down Washington Street some warm spring evening when work let out, your one thin dress finally right for the weather, an ankle pretty as any flower’s stem, full breasts the moon’s envy, eyes bold or modest as you passed me by.

I might have thought, as heat climbed from the pavement, what soft work you’d make for a man like me: even the time clock, thief of hours, kinder, and the long day passing in a dream. Cradled in that dream I might have slept forever, but today’s nightmare vision woke me: your arms aflame, wings of fire, and you a falling star, a terrible lump of coal in the burning street. No dream, your hair of smoke, your blackened face. No dream the fist I make, taking your hand of ashes in my own.

7. Cortege

A cold rain comforts the sky.
Everything ash-colored under clouds.
I take my place in the crowd, move without will as the procession moves,

a gray wave breaking against the street.
Up ahead, one hundred and forty seven coffins float, wreckage of lives. I follow the box without a name. In it whose hand encloses whose heart? Whose mouth presses the air toward a scream?

She is no one, the one I claim as sister. When the familiar is tagged and taken away, she remains.

I do not mourn her. I mourn no one,
I do not praise her. No one is left to praise. Seventy years after her death, I walk in March rain behind her.

She travels before me into the dark.

Questions to respond to

1. Why do you think the first section of the poem is entitled, “Havdallah”?
2. List the figurative language in the second section and explain the effectiveness.
3. Explain how the imagery in section 3 functions as an understatement.
4. What is the tone of section 5?
5. Google “Binghamton factory fire” and read what you find. Then make a guess about the factory conditions at the turn of the century in this country. What class of people was mainly affected? Were they in a position to affect changes?

So Mexicans Are Taking Jobs From Americans  (1979)

Jimmy Santiago Baca  (b. 1952)
O Yes? Do they come on horses with rifles, and say,
   Ese gringo,³ gimmee your job?
And do you, gringo, take off your ring, drop your wallet into a blanket spread over the ground, and walk away?

I hear Mexicans are taking your jobs away.
Do they sneak into town at night,
and as you’re walking home with a whore,
do they mug you, a knife at your throat,
saying, I want your job?

Even on TV, an asthmatic leader crawls turtle heavy, leaning on an assistant, and from a nest of wrinkles on his face, a tongue paddles through flashing waves of lightbubs, of cameramen, rasping “They’re taking our jobs away.”

Well, I’ve gone about trying to find them, asking just where the hell are these fighters.

The rifles I hear sound in the night are white farmers shooting blacks and browns whose ribs I see jutting out and starving children,
I see the poor marching for a little work,
I see small white farmers selling out to clean-suited farmers living in New York, who’ve never been on a farm, don’t know the look of a hoof or the smell of a woman’s body bending all day long in fields.

³ Hey, whitey.
I see this, and I hear only a few people 30 got all the money in this world, the rest count their pennies to buy bread and butter.

Below that cool green sea of money, 35 millions and millions of people fight to live, search for pearls in the darkest depths of their dreams, hold their breath for years trying to cross poverty to just having something.

The children are dead already. We are killing them, 40 that is what America should be saying;
on TV, in the streets, in offices, should be saying,
“We aren’t giving the children a chance to live.”

Mexicans are taking our jobs, they say instead.
What they really say is, let them die,
and the children too.

Things to think about

1. In many of the discussions about illegal immigrants and unemployment in this country, you will often hear people say that the Mexicans are getting jobs that American citizens need. With this in mind, to whom is the poem addressed? In other words, to whom is the narrator speaking?

2. Lines 20 to 29 present an alternative picture. Try to explain that.

3. In the section formed by lines 33 – 37, explain the metaphors you see.

4. How do Americans characterize Mexicans?

5. What image does the poet use to force you to a different perception of this situation?

6. Who has the power in this country? Do those with power willingly share what they have with those that have-not? According to this poem, might there be another perception than that given us by the media?
